Estevan to Canada: Flick Off!

Flick Off Canada! That's the message from Saskatchewan's energy capital.

Because of a strong online vote, the southern city has won the right to host Flick-Fest, a national carbon neutral music festival to be held in late spring or early summer 2008.

"It's a very positive thing for Estevan, for Saskatchewan and for Canada," said Estevan's mayor, Garry St. Onge. "We are excited about this opportunity to showcase our City to the rest of Canada."

The entire community rallied to bring Flick-Fest to Saskatchewan. There was an online vote to win the right to host the festival. The ballots were waited per capita and the 10,000 strong community came together to beat out the closest potential host sites of Duncan, B.C. and Wolfville, N.S..

The free event is sponsored by Virgin Mobile Canada, MuchMusic, Roots Canada, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and the non-profit group Environmental Defence.

No acts have been announced yet, but according to Environmental Defence's Jennifer Foulds, it is just a matter of time. Flick-Fest will feature primarily Canadian artists who want to have a voice in the fight against global climate change and be televised live on MuchMusic.

"Humanity's window to act on climate change is narrowing, and it's up to each of us to find new ways of getting more people involved in this global fight. So next spring, Estevan will hold a carbon-neutral party to raise awareness—spreading the word to more Canadians. It's going to be a blast," said Sir Richard Branson, the flamboyant billionaire who founded the UK based Virgin Group, at the announcement in November. "All of Estevan is invited to a party. There'll be no cover at the door.

In fact, we're going to throw the door wide open so all of Canada can hear. Not just great music, but real solutions that let each of us do more to fight the crisis of our time."

The goal of Flick Off (www.flickoff.org), the parent organization hosting Flick-Fest, is to fight climate change by getting Canadians to use less energy. Mayor St. Onge has already taken his first step. "I know I have been trying to take little steps to do my part, which according to the organizers is the goal," he said. "It's little things like making sure to turn off the lights when leaving a room and not letting my car idle while waiting for a train."

These small steps are the goal of Flick-Off said Foulds. If everyone tried to take at least one step towards conserving energy than the world would be a cleaner and greener place. The founding partners noted that it's a bit of an ironic twist that Estevan, known for its coal and coal generated power plant, won the rights to host the festival. But Mayor St. Onge was quick to point towards "clean coal" technologies that the City is pursuing, something noted by Environmental Defence.

"We love that Estevan's known as the 'energy city,'" said Dr. Rick Smith, Executive Director of Environmental Defence. "With their major industries all focused on power generation, they are living proof that fossil fuels and clean, climate-saving energy can grow in the same place. We look forward to breaking down old barriers and motivating a whole new generation of environmentalists in the spring. Climate change isn't waiting, and neither can we."

Stay tuned to www.suma.org or the weekly Urban Update. The dates and acts will be posted once they are announced.

Executive Director's Voice

Only a few more weeks and elected officials from Saskatchewan urban municipalities will be gathering in Regina for SUMA's annual convention under the theme of "Strength through Diversity".

Again, the Convention will be an opportunity for delegates from cities, towns, villages, resort villages and northern communities to learn, debate and make decisions on matters of common interest. And while they will all come from communities with diverse issues and concerns, their united voice will once more provide the strength for this great Association to carry on with the policy directions they will adopt on the convention floor.

For outsiders and newcomers, the convention can be overwhelming: hundreds of mayors and councillors from all sizes of municipalities sharing their views and expectations with their colleagues on a vast array of municipal issues. In fact, we are expecting once again more than 1,000 delegates to renew friendships and establish new contacts in a forum where local politicians speak a language common to the municipal environment.

From recycling to policing, from leisure programs to drinking water, from cold mix patch to cathodic protection, delegates will be seeking new solutions to their problems.

They will be sourcing products and services at the Municipal Trade Show. In plenary sessions, they will also be helping the Board of Directors to formulate and prioritize the Association's lobbying strategies to create a better public policy climate to empower municipalities to do a better job for their citizens.

This type of interaction and this event are truly unique to the municipal world. It is reflective of what makes municipal government so responsive to the needs of their constituents.

There is no similar forum, or anything close to it, at the Provincial and Federal levels. The broad knowledge base of municipal elected officials, their desire to deliver the best services possible for the tax dollars their municipalities collect and their willingness to go public with their annual deliberations is part of the branding which has made our municipal councils accountable and accessible to the electorate.

Since last year, the SUMA's Bylaws require that our Board of Directors meet promptly following the annual Convention to update the Association's strategic plan. Taking into consideration the debates and deliberations of the delegates, Directors will identify the key strategic objectives of the Association for the upcoming year. This process will once again help the Directors to identify their action plan for 2008.

Best wishes to all, with the hope to see you all in Regina at the 2008 Convention on February 3.

President's Voice

I'm sure that by the time you read this the turkey has been digested and Santa is well ensconced back at the North Pole. This is my last message of 2007 and wow... what a year we have had!

It all got started at the last Convention where I graciously accepted your wishes that I stay on as President of SUMA. This year has been a learning experience for all of us on the Board and we look forward to representing you, our members, in 2008. What are some of 2007's highlights?

- We had another successful Convention in which we elected our Executive Committee and adopted several major Bylaw amendments and policy directions.
- Many hours of work by the managers and Directors in our retreat to Manitou Beach concluded with the adoption of our updated Strategic Plan. The working retreat brought our management team and the Board closer together and gave us a working plan for SUMA's future.
- We came as close as we have ever been to signing a long-term revenue sharing and infrastructure funding agreement with the provincial government. Unfortunately the election put a hold on the negotiations. We are hopeful that our new Minister of Municipal Affairs, Bill Hutchinson, a man who brings a wealth of municipal government experience (including time on the SUMA Board) with him to the position, will have a major announcement for us at Convention.
- This year's Regional Meetings were extremely successful. It is one of SUMA's strengths that we, the Executive, can meet with our members face - to - face and discuss the issues important to all urban municipalities. Thank-you to all who attended and made the bi-yearly meetings such a success.
- The launch of www.sumasustainability.org is something the Board and I are extremely proud of. We have made Urban Municipal sustainability a cornerstone of the organization's, and truly Saskatchewan's, future.
- We are on the cusp of finalizing SUMA's self insurance program. All of our preliminary work on this program looks good and the benefits to our members will be invaluable; it will be geared towards Saskatchewan municipalities, run by Saskatchewan municipalities, for Saskatchewan municipalities.

These are but a few examples of the work we have been doing on behalf of Saskatchewan's cities, towns and villages in 2007 and we look forward to an equally successful 2008. It all gets started with our 2008 Annual Convention. Keep your eyes on the mail, all of our the potential Bylaw changes and Resolutions brought forward for our Convention have been sent out and should have reached you before this copy of the Urban Voice. If you haven't received your package please contact the staff at the office. They will be happy to help. The year seemed to fly by and we are only a month way from February's Annual Convention. From all the work done by the Board, Convention Committee, staff and of course the helpful suggestions from our members, it's looking like 2008 will be SUMA's best convention yet.

Well, that's about it for now. I hope you all had a great Christmas; I wish you all the best in the New Year and look forward to seeing everyone at the Tailgate Party at Convention in February.

Getting beyond “interim” increases to Revenue Sharing

The year 2007 started and ended with high SUMA expectations about finally achieving a long-term revenue sharing and infrastructure funding plan. One difference was that, by the end of the year, these hopes were being directed to a new Saskatchewan Government, following the Sask. Party victory in November.

January, 2007, opened with a new commitment to work toward what came to be called a Municipal Sector Strategy Plan, which included the key funding issues. Meetings were organized for several sector groups or “tables,” all involving non-elected officials but reporting back to the Municipal Forum, chaired by the Minister of Government Relations (a portfolio now to be called Municipal Affairs).

The Provincial Budget in March produced another “interim” increase to Revenue Sharing grants and confirmed that most Provincial infrastructure dollars for urban municipalities would flow through the Building Communities Program. Early BCP money went to larger, regional recreational or multi-purpose facilities in cities, but some towns also received approvals before the budgeted $40 million for 2007 became overcommitted.

While the Federal Government took a long time to sort out the nature of their continuing contributions to infrastructure funding, there was some anxiety in the spring about whether a long-term Provincial Revenue Sharing plan would be finalized by the end of October, the agreed upon target date. A consultant was hired to review municipal expenditure information and help determine a level of “Provincial interest” in supporting expenditures in key service areas.

The consultant’s report in September confirmed that a case could be made to more than double the current level of Revenue Sharing grants, thereafter sustained with an escalator formula tied to the growth of municipal costs or Provincial Government revenues. Despite reassurances that this work could continue toward the end of October deadline, even with a Provincial election on the horizon, the election call abruptly halted further talks.

The election campaign confirmed the Sask. Party’s commitment to work toward a long-term plan to share the Province’s “own source revenues,” meaning revenue from taxes and resource royalties but not from Federal government transfers. In the meantime, the now Sask. Party government has pledged to at least provide an “interim” increase in Revenue Sharing funding of 7 per cent in each of the next two years.

The SUMA Board has already put new Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Hutchinson on notice that such a small increase (less than the “interim” increases of the last six years) would not be considered acceptable, nor would a further two-year delay in finalizing a long-term plan. Expectations remain high that Treasury Board will consider a larger increase for 2008, if not a longer-term solution.

The accompanying graph demonstrates that recent Revenue Sharing increases, and the Sask. Party’s early commitment to continue small increases on an “interim” basis, only go part way to restoring more adequate Provincial grant levels to help sustain urban municipal services.

A whole lot happening at Convention!

Education Sessions, Plenary Sessions, Trade show, Awards, Fun and Entertainment are all part of the 2008 Annual SUMA Convention.

The Annual Convention is the largest, and in some ways most important event hosted by SUMA each year. Convention offers the opportunity to review the policies and bylaws of the Association and to vote on the resolutions that give the Association direction for the coming year.

The theme for the 2008 convention is "Strength Through Diversity" and we have put together a program that recognizes the needs of municipalities regardless of size.

The convention logo symbolizes strength and unity demonstrating that all members along with all levels of government must work to secure the future of Saskatchewan municipalities.

Convention Plenary Session

Convention 2008 also offers a thought-provoking and informative session on Municipal Cultural Planning, featuring Dr. Greg Baeker.

Municipal cultural planning (MCP) is a new approach to local and regional cultural development that has been gaining attention nationally and internationally over the past several years. Originating in Australia in the 1990s, MCP is defined as "the strategic and integrated planning and use of cultural resources for economic and community development."

Dr. Greg Baeker, a senior consultant with AuthenticCity, an urban policy practice, will share the characteristics of MCP and its development. He brings more than 30 years of experience working with communities of various sizes and challenges to the table.

Dr. Baeker was a lead advisor on the Creative Connections, a cultural mapping project taking place in Saskatoon, and is currently advising SaskCulture on its work to pilot cultural planning strategies in four smaller Saskatchewan communities.

According to Dr. Baeker, MCP is proving an effective strategy for building local economies in communities of all sizes in Ontario.

One of the leading municipalities is Prince Edward County, a small rural municipality that has gained national attention for its economic development strategy build on creativity, culture and quality of place.

Another indication of MCPs growing importance in Ontario is the collaboration of various government departments, both provincial and local, with various business, education and cultural organizations.

The formation of the Municipal Cultural Planning Partnership (MCPP) in Ontario is a coalition of six provincial ministries (Culture, Municipal Affairs and Housing, Agriculture and Rural Affairs, Economic Development and Trade, Tourism, Citizenship, Northern Development and Mines), the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and groups representing culture, business and post-secondary institutions. All of these groups are working together to promote MCP in communities across Ontario.

Sustainable communities planning workshop a success

More than fifty mayors, councillors, administrators and community leaders descended upon the Alex Dillabough center in Battleford for a two day workshop on sustainable community planning in late November. After organizing the second in a series of such workshops, sustainability expert Hart Haidn was pleased with the results from the session and felt that attendees left feeling enlightened and energized.

Delegates heard from a variety of speakers including Paul Nash's provocative presentation on water conservation by municipally mandated and paid-for fixture refits. Nash told of his experience in Sydney, Australia where in 1992 a massive water conservation strategy was put in place at a time when the city's population hovered around four million and they were facing costly water facility upgrades should further growth continue. Fast forward to present day where Sydney has grown to over five million people and they still have not had to expand water treatment capacity thanks to the foresight in the early nineties.

The City of Dawson Creek sent Emanuel Machado and Greg Dobrowolski, who described that city's success in sustainable community planning. By adopting the principles and strategies of sustainable community planning, Dawson Creek has not only saved money, but are actually finding ways to generate income. B.C. Hydro is paying the city a premium for power generated in the community and sold back into the grid. SUMA's Sustainable Communities

Greg Dobrowolski and Emanuel Machado describe the successes that Dawson Creek has had through sustainable planning in the community. Photo Courtesy of Hart Haiden

Steering Committee is researching ways to have similar processes adopted in Saskatchewan.

While power and water conservation are two highly effective ways to achieve sustainability targets, H.E.L.P International's Rodney Sidloski has ways to enhance community beauty while dealing with a typically unpleasant concern. As more communities are decommissioning old landfills, Sidloski has helped by capping the old nuisance grounds with high water consuming trees. The process is called phytoremediation and can be used in situations ranging from desalinizing land to reducing pressure on aging lagoons by the use of planting trees. Sidloski, who is based in Weburn, has been in the business for years and has helped communities around the world.

As SUMA's Sustainable Community Planning initiative continues to develop, the practical applications are becoming more accessible to municipalities. SUMA's goal is to become the go-to source for information on municipal sustainability planning and we're in the early stages of preparing for another session in the future.
